

It was the first time the Irish had been treated with such an assumption. No Englishman felt the humiliation more than himself, but he declared it did not rest on 1st July, but on 1st August. For the Government sent another man to Ireland to carry out a measure similar to that under which Mr. Parnell had been treated, it would again sell the people of Ireland.

Healy said the bill aimed at giving hanging powers to three judges on any evidence that could be brought up.

Harcourt, replying to questions, stated that the extreme penalty, on summary conviction by magistrates, would be death, imprisonment, or a fine. As to whether the bill would be retrospective, he said that any crime committed and which should be brought to justice would come under its operation.

Gwyn, Radical member for Newcastle on Tyne, said that the bill virtually amounted to an assumption of the lives, liberty and property of the Irish people in the hands of Lord Spencer.

The Pall Mall Gazette, while accepting other parts of the bill, protests against the clause concerning the right of search, the restriction of the liberty of the press and of public meetings, and the apprehension of witnesses.

It is believed, however, that the bill will be passed in much the same form as it is now. Mr. Gladstone brings to the bottom of all that is now in the air. At best, its failure will be attributed to too lenient administration. Meanwhile, it will be well if the bill is passed.

The Freeman's Journal, Dublin, declares the bill one of the most tyrannical enactments of modern times, and says it is perhaps the severest coercion Act ever proposed for Ireland.

The Globe prints the following prominently: "The new provisions of the new coercion bill are recommended by Parnell for his resignation of the Irish Civil Service."

The public feeling is that in face of the recent improvement the extreme measure of repression is unjustifiable.

Gladstone stated in the House of Commons this evening that he hoped to introduce the Coercion Bill on Monday.

On the second reading of the Coercion Bill, J. H. O'Donnell will move that the prevalence of outrages and disaffection in Ireland is largely due to the unjust conviction of 40,000 people, who will be further exasperated by the new Act of repression.

The Star says it is probable that Gladstone will shortly resign the Chancery of the Exchequer.

The Government that although Mr. Parnell, and other members of the Government, may come to terms, they can only speak for themselves, and the movement for complete separation will go on unchecked. Last Saturday night Mr. Gladstone and the people of England saw for the first time that under which Mr. Parnell had been treated, it would again sell the people of Ireland.
